Concept Note

Since the Moplah insurrection was 100 years old this year, it has been regarded as one of the most significant events in the nation's history and a moment in which the air of community hatred began to taint the holistic march toward freedom. Historians have debated this watershed moment, which needs to be re-examined, retold, and retrieved to reconfigure our historical presence from which we can look back.

Keeping this speck of thought as our conceptual center-ground, we wish to go forth. Willing scholars are hereby requested to keep their train of thought according to this fundamental point of interest that this special issue tries to cover.

KEY SUBJECTIVE SCOPES FOR THIS ISSUE:

- i) Communalism and the Indian Peasant Question
- ii) Communalization of the working class
- iii) Communal Strife and the tribal people
- iv) National Movement, Communalization and the Marginal People
- v) State policy, Communal Violence and the Marginal People
- vi) Partition, Refugee Question, and Communal Violence
